My First Week in Kyoto

我在京都的第一週

Hi, everyone! This is my first blog post from abroad. I am in Kyoto for a two-week homestay. My host family is very kind. Nobody speaks much English, and my Japanese is not good either. However, we understand each other with smiles and hand signs. Everything here looks different, and I love it.

In the morning, I hear birds outside my window. Breakfast is rice, fish, and soup. It tastes a little strange, but it smells great. My host mother cooks everything herself. After breakfast, I walk to the language school. Temples are everywhere, and the streets feel so quiet. Nobody talks aloud on the bus. At first, I thought that was strange. Now I think it sounds peaceful.

Yesterday, we watched a tea ceremony. Each step was slow and careful. I listened to the teacher and tried to copy her. Although I made some mistakes, she smiled at me. Besides, the tea tasted wonderful. I feel lucky to be here. Next week, we will go somewhere special. I will tell you all about it then!
