Sixty Years Later, a Second Honeymoon

六十年後的第二次蜜月

TAINAN, Oct. 12 - When Lin Chun-mei walked down the aisle in 1966, she was a nineteen-year-old bride wearing a borrowed dress. On Saturday, surrounded by three generations of family at a small restaurant in Anping, she put on a white dress once again. Her husband, Lin Tsai-fu, now eighty-four, had tears in his eyes. 'She is still my darling,' he told reporters, 'and she still argues with me about the rice cooker.'

The couple's six grandchildren organized the celebration as a surprise. 'They never had a honeymoon because Grandpa had to go back to the fishing boat the day after the wedding,' explained their eldest grandchild, Lin Yu-ting, 26. 'So we booked them a three-day trip to Penghu.' Twin cousins Kai and Kuan, both twelve, had been saving their red envelope money since the Lunar New Year to help pay for it.

The marriage was not an easy one. Mr. Lin, an orphan who was raised by his uncle, his legal guardian, had inherited nothing but a leaking wooden house from his ancestors. Mrs. Lin's relations warned her that she would become dependent on a poor fisherman. Yet the bond between them grew stronger with every storm. 'A good relationship is built on mutual respect,' Mrs. Lin said. 'He listens to me, and I let him think he wins.'

Neighbors describe the pair as constant companions who still hold hands at the morning market. Asked for advice for young couples, Mr. Lin laughed. 'Find a mate who can laugh at you,' he said, 'and then make sure you laugh together.'
