Two Days in Tainan: A Walker's Guide

台南兩日：步行者指南

Tainan was Taiwan's capital for more than two hundred years, and it remains the best place on the island to see how a small settlement grows into a modern city. The following guide will help you explore it in two days without a tour bus.

Step one: begin at Fort Zeelandia in the Anping district, the oldest European site in Taiwan. The Dutch built it in 1624, and although only part of the original walls survives, the fort is still the city's most famous landmark. Nearby, a canal that once carried trading ships now carries tourists in small boats. Step two: walk, do not ride. Tainan's charm hides in its alleys, where old houses, temples, and tiny coffee shops stand side by side. Many lanes are paved with red bricks, and some are so narrow that two people cannot pass without turning sideways.

Step three: talk to the inhabitants. Unlike people in a busy urban center such as Taipei, Tainan residents are rarely in a hurry, and the owner of a noodle stand may tell you more about the neighborhood than any guidebook. Step four: visit the Chimei Museum in the southern suburb of Rende. Its white building, with a wide avenue and a fountain in front, looks like a European palace, and its collection includes everything from ancient weapons to violins.

Finally, end your trip by the seaside. Watch the sunset from Anping harbor, then return to the city center for a bowl of beef soup. By then, you will understand why visitors call Tainan a food lover's paradise, and why its location, far from the skyscrapers of the north, is exactly what makes it worth the trip.
